

TWIST INTERIOR DESIGN

While the family of this 1990s-era home liked their neighborhood and—for the most part—their house, they felt a little bored with its “suburban” interior.

“Our clients wanted to update their space into a distinctive, upbeat environment,” says Sandy LaMendola, ASID, owner/principal designer of Twist Interior Design.

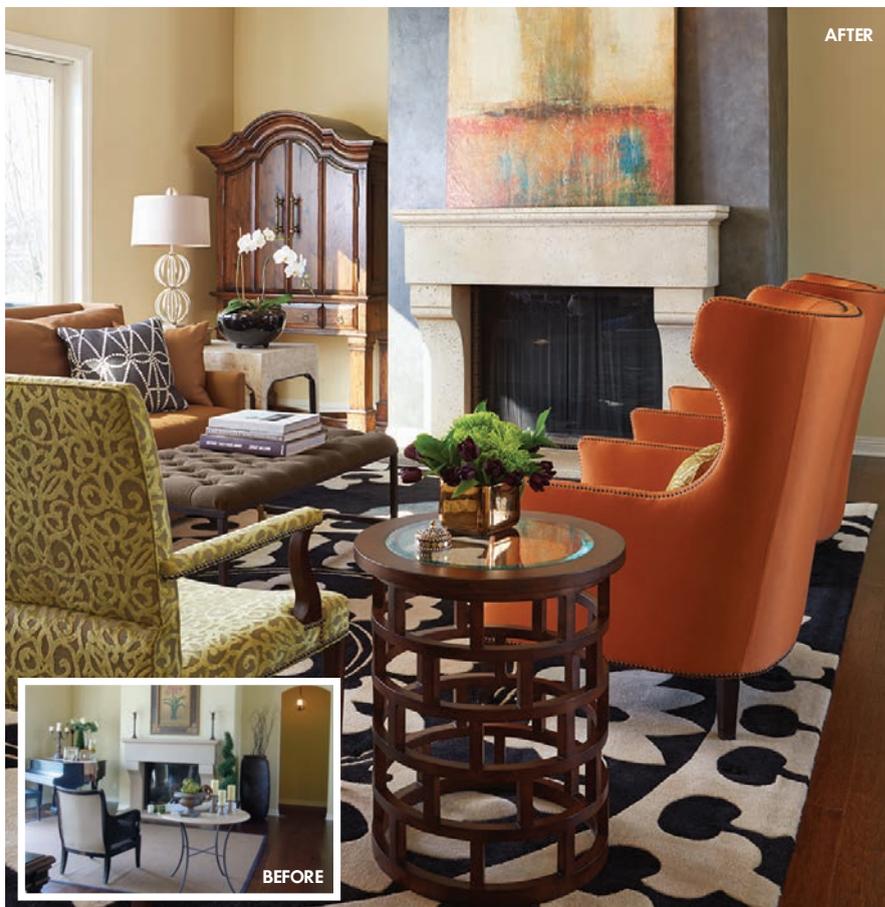

She met with the couple to learn what they liked and disliked about their home, and how they wanted it to work for them. Leveraging her experience in the industry, LaMendola knows how to achieve unexpected “twists” while keeping spaces true to clients’ personalities and lifestyle.

“Our job isn’t to impose an aesthetic. It’s to help our clients discover theirs, and bring it to life,” she explains. The Twist team is adamant about not making design decisions without consulting clients, and they work with vendors, tradespeople, and other participants to “sweat the details, confront any surprises, and maintain the momentum.”

“The journey of designing your space is an adventure,” she says. “It should be interesting, fulfilling, and—most importantly—fun.”

Twist collaborated with the clients to create an energetic hip-city vibe through pops of color, a dramatic oversized painting, well-chosen accessories, and eclectic textures and patterns.

The final result is a space the homeowners love: a blend of arresting graphics and timeless elements that effortlessly complement the way they live, and boldly speak to who they are.
